

Going beyond Troubled Families and improving outcomes

Sentinel's integrated data system enables multiple agencies to work in partnership to address the complex and inter-related causes of domestic crisis.

Integrating disparate data streams, our Hub solution provides an accurate, single view of individuals and families across a sub-regional area that may be covered by several local authorities.

The single, defined point of access supports and enhances the work of the main partners - for example: local authorities, the police, probation service and the NHS – enabling them to allocate support where it is needed most while also maximising efficiency.

Benefits include:

- Makes a joint approach possible - Sentinel's Hub is able to integrate data from any number of partners across a geographical area. Our system is used by front-line service teams and supports their work by providing data for 360-degree profiling.
- Helps to tackle wide-ranging issues - integrates data streams relating to issues such as crime, domestic abuse, social exclusion, health, young carers, homelessness and unemployment.
- Improves decision-making and reporting – enables support to be targeted based on full awareness of an individual's social and family background. Our solution also provides sophisticated reporting capability.
- Greater efficiency and financial savings - by facilitating joined-up approaches, our system helps the various partner organisations to achieve significant savings.
- Enhanced data security - meeting strict information governance requirements, our solution features in-built data security and provides fully-controlled access.
